Mrssss Kelly and Walsh, with an enterprise which deserves to be rewarded, have issued a very interesting souvenir of what has come to be spoken of in Shanghai as 'The Great Snowfall of 1893.' The souvenir is in the form of a book of largesized views-twelve in number-of various move a resolution declaring it to be public institutions in the Model Settleenent, of the Public Gardens, and the Racecourse in their 'winter dress,' and a preface is given by 'A. E. M.' laudatory of Shanghai and explanatory of the views. The views are better than the preface. Shanghai is, has been, and will continue to be admired by Hongkong residents, as well as by visitors from all parts of the world, It is certainly—as A. E. M. puts it—'a wonderful instance of what western energy, paraistonce and akili can produce, but if we are, to take his brief description of it before foreigners, clad in most extraprdingry apparel, 'advented' to the banks of the Whangpoo, it must have been still more wonderful then than now. It is hard, he writes, to imagine the old world on the banks of the Whangpoo helore the advent of foreigners, clad in side the walls of old Shanghai, whitens waste of mire and of rustling reads.'
